In Peace or War, on land or sea,
Our flag, the sign of the free,
Bright emblem of Columbia's glory,
Shall tell to coming years the story
How, stout of heart and strong of hand,
The patriots of our native land
Bore it, the nation's hope and life,
On battle field and forest strife,
Still on 'till through the sulphurous cloud
It broke in triumph 'neath our shield.

The Retirement of General Scott.

The country will hear with surprise that the age and increasing infirmities of the noble-hearted old patriot and soldier have at last compelled him to retire from active service. His letter announcing that decision, with the replies of President Lincoln and Secretary Cameron, and the proceedings of the Cabinet thereon, were received by telegraph and published on Saturday. No man with the exception of Washington, has ever stood justly in the estimation of the people than General Scott. Not even Washington himself had a deeper love of his country, or a more devoted service to its defense. That we are to lose the benefit of his active service in the time of peril to the Republic seems like another calamity added to the woes which are upon us—but let us have faith to believe that an overruling Providence will give us the right man for the place. The people already have confidence that the young and vigorous McClellan will in his duties and responsibilities equal to the great duties and responsibilities which now devolve upon him as the acting commander in chief. He has wonderfully performed the arduous task of forming, disciplining and providing for the grand army of the Potomac, and proved that he has administrative and executive capacity of the highest order. That his military genius is of a nature to enable him to handle an army of two hundred thousand men successfully in the field of battle, is to be seen if we have a general impression of the Potomac. Such a contest may never come, but if it does, we know of no commander in whom we should have greater confidence. As to General Scott, let us say that he can pay no debt down in this, the darkest hour of his country's history, but that his life may be spared to behold a glorious restoration of peace, and the establishment of our Republic upon a firmer basis than ever, throughout an active and happy country. The people will best with pleasure that a recent act of Congress provided that there should be no reduction in the pay subsistence, or allowances of General Scott in the event of his withdrawal from his command. It is well known, says the N. Y. Tribune, that he has had an unqualified approval with the War Department since the Mexican War. Secretary Cameron has recently given a careful examination to the claim against the Government, now thirteen years old, of $100,000 which he brought home in debt, on account of his expenditures and receipts in Mexico, and, so far as he could do it, discredited the veteran as a financial agent of the Government, and a commander of supreme authority. Mr. Cameron reports that General Scott was not entitled to the money he claimed from the Government, but that he was to be paid millions of dollars which, by the time of war, he could have pocketed, under the settled principles regulating the distribution of prize and contribution of money. This opportunity of personal advantage, which General Scott generally diverted to the founding of a home for invalid soldiers. One of his most unselfish acts after he is dead, will be the Bunker House near Washington.

General Scott has obtained the advanced age of 75 years and 6 months. His military services date back to 1806, when at the age of only 22, he was appointed a captain of artillery. By a rapid revolution of Congress, approved February 26, 1845, the office of Lieutenant General, held only by Washington before, was revived and conferred upon General Scott to take effect from March 29, 1847, and to expire when vacated by his resignation.

The tribute paid to the virtues and the loyalty of the retiring patriot, by General McClellan, in his General Order announcing his own appointment, was so beautiful and beautiful that we reproduce it here.

In accordance with General Order No. 94, of the War Department, I hereby assume command of the Army of the United States. In the midst of the difficulties which surround us, and divide the nation, hesitation and self-interest may well accompany the assumption of so great a responsibility; but, looking to the noble and patriotic character of the brave and noble General Scott, and to the fact that he has been a faithful and devoted servant of his country, I cannot but feel that he will be a valuable asset to the nation.

The tribute paid to the virtues and the loyalty of the retiring patriot, by General McClellan, in his General Order announcing his own appointment, was so beautiful and beautiful that we reproduce it here.

Gen. Fremont's Purchases in Europe.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune.

Sir: The arms which Gen. Fremont bought in Europe were 2,000 rifles, 500 revolvers, 8,000 cannon, with shot and shell, and 2,000,000 percussion caps.

The rifles were new and of the best standard rifle in use in the regular army, and were made in the Belgrade Arsenal.

After the Secretary of War, Mr. Cameron, sent an order to Mr. A. L. S. and Mr. Day to purchase 20,000 more rifles of the same kind as those purchased by Gen. Fremont.

Still later, Mr. Schuyler, sent to Europe for a special agent to procure arms, offered to sell 100,000 rifles of the same pattern to the number of 100,000.

And a contract was made by him for 40,000 rifles absolutely, and for 20,000 more if they could be furnished.

And the rifle is the same as the arms in every respect as the 2,000 purchased by Gen. Fremont, save that Gen. Fremont's were made in Belgium, and the others in France.

The 60 revolvers purchased by Gen. Fremont were highly approved by Mr. Schuyler, and he bought 10,000 more of the same kind.

The rifle cannon, eight in number, were 12 pounds, and were made to order, and there is no better rifle cannon of its size in the world.

These were all the arms purchased by Gen. Fremont in Europe.

He desired to purchase a few muskets, at a time when arms were scarce, but he had no success, and he has been purchasing the muskets since he returned.

He has been purchasing the muskets since he returned.
